Dear Parents and Carers,

RE: Weekly Update

Today we break up for the half-term holiday and I hope that the students are able to get away from screens and enjoy some time to relax and have fun. This will be more challenging than usual as there aren't all that many options available to us; last week I circulated an A-Z of ideas so some of these may be useful for the week ahead. For those who like to keep up to date with local developments, enclosed with this letter is the JPRA newsletter.

Emmbrook Wave

The third edition of our half-termly newspaper will be published online today. This has been an excellent addition to the school and is packed with information, including an update on the half-term from me.

Remote learning feedback

Thank you for all the feedback you have provided so far. The surveys remain open:

Vulnerable children and children of critical workers

It remains the case that critical worker children should only attend school if there are no alternatives. Should you have a child who requires this provision please contact us using covid@emmbrook.wokingham.sch.uk so that we can discuss availability.

Covid-19 cases

If your child tests positive for Covid-19 please notify us (even if your child is not currently attending the school site) using covid@emmbrook.wokingham.sch.uk.

Online lessons will resume with registration at 8.25am on Monday 22nd February. I'd like to thank the entire Emmbrook community for the way that we have all pulled together to support the education and wellbeing of our young people – it has been a remarkable effort!

Take care and have a good half-term week.

Best wishes,

Nick McSweeney
